Anyone gaining an insight into the master workshops during a guided tour through the manufactory will discover that handmade plaster moulds, so-called negative moulds, are used in the casting of many individual parts; figurines, for example. Impressed by the simple pragmatism of the mould, Konstantin Grcic used it as a pattern and translated it into a series of porcelain bowls. As the industrial designer was keen to emphasise: “Design does not always mean inventing something new”. “New things are created by placing the find in an unusual context”.
