Such is the fine nuance of the coloration of the porcelain's interior and the translucency of the body that, at first glance, one could mistake this 20 centimetre wide volute bowl for an actual clam. Ted Muehling, designer of the piece, says his objective was to use the delicate beauty of the translucent material to capture the elegance of a clam. Together with the master craftspeople of the manufactory, the multi-award-winning designer was successful in capturing both.
