As the sole ultra-pure manufactory, it goes without saying that Nymphenburg also produces its own in-house porcelain material. Only a mix of china clay, feldspar and quartz which has been matured for at least two years can provide the optimum source material to make possible the manufacture of such time-consuming masterpieces like this water lily in the manufactory's studios. The embosser requires several days to perfect this water lily as each of the wafer-thin petals is made one at a time and shaped freely by hand. And since each of these table flowers is a one-of-a-kind piece, they are being sold as part of a limited edition of just 25 in a wooden case.
